Promoting effective collaboration between primary and secondary care for the elderly and disabled. For the chronically ill, outpatient care in primary care will increasingly become the principal source of care. Only if general practice and secondary care are able to collaborate effectively will the quality of care for such people be optimal. This paper reports on a study exploring the possibilities for doing this. The study group consisted of 10 GPs and 15 acute medical ward physicians from various Dutch hospitals. Data was collected in qualitative interviews and by means of focus groups. The findings show that GPs and ward physicians in the Netherlands mostly collaborate successfully. Collaboration is facilitated by the ad hoc organization of care and by good communication. Both services are dealing with patients with a common disease but with diverse needs. Collaboration between GPs and medical ward physicians is important not only for efficiency reasons but also because it is an essential ingredient in the delivery of a patient-centered primary care service. Collaboration between GPs and medical ward physicians seems to be an important step in the delivery of an effective primary care service.I can't honestly say that I'm incredibly excited about the new movie Blade Runner, as I've never been a huge fan of the original. That being said, I actually appreciate the movie for being a prequel to the Blade Runner series, and particularly like that the story has been relegated to the universe of Blade Runner 2049. The Jets are starting to play up to their capabilities, but it's going to be a test for both teams when they meet in Foxboro, especially on the defensive side of the ball. I think that the Jets' running game will continue to be a problem for the Patriots, especially with the injuries to David Harris and Chad Pennington. Jets running backs Matt
